WAR ELSEWHERE ON BILLBOARDS

As a consequence of the billboarders' strike in Chicago, the theatrical managers of that city have discovered that they entertained larger audiences than usual through newspaper advertising only. Cincinnati, which led by the Business Men's Club, has been waging a successful war against the presence of billboards within its town, has recently adopted a code of regulations, including them in the city's building ordinances.

These regulations aim at, first, the character of the materials that compose a billboard (noncombustible only); second, the restriction of their surface area to fixed height and length limits; third, the ascertaining of the distance separating them from the ground; fourth, the necessity for an open space at the end; fifth, the maintaining of the building line; last the restricting of the matter exposed on them. To these regulations the Business Men's Club hopes to add that of prohibiting the presence of signs or billboards on or facing any public park.

Their sole excuse for being having now been set at naught by the recent discoveries of the Chicago theater managers, billboards, ugly to the esthetic taste of this century, will soon, it is hoped, be done away with.

PREHISTORIC WOMAN'S SKULL.

(LONDON.—Prof. Arthur Keith, curator of the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, who has been engaged in the examination of the famous prehistoric skull unearthed at Gibraltar some years ago, today announced his conclusions, the chief of which is that the skull is that of a woman who must have lived at least 600,000 years ago.

The Gibraltar skull has been the object of the examination of many scientists and the cause of many theories. Keith approached the task of lifting the veil from the past with a new system of intricate measurements and all the resources of science at his back, and has compared the skull with all other available prehistoric relics.

"I have little doubt but that the skull is that of a woman," he said, discarding technicalities. "From the size of her brain she must have been shrewd, probably a woman, too of considerable spirit. One can reckon pretty accurately also the time at least 600,000 years ago.

"From the jaws and the fact that the muscles of mastication are remarkably strong it is possible to reduce that this prehistoric woman ate nuts and roots probably entered very largely into her diet.

"Men 600,000 years ago were wild: out doubt long armed and their legs short and they had abnormally thick necks. It is clear, too, I think, that their brains were far larger than has been conceded. It seems reasonably certain that they were able to speak to each other. From my examination of the brain cavity of the Gibraltar skull I have been able to deduce quite clearly that the cells controlling speech were there.

"The prehistoric woman's skull indicates that she had a large nose. Her eyes, too, were much more prominent, and her palate one-third larger than that of the woman of today."
